God in heaven, I cried, in tones of anguish. Kill me at once, but do not ask me to choose. It is one against many, yet what are they to me? Better that a score should perish swiftly, unexpectedly, than that one man should suffer such tortures in anticipation of a fate like mine. I tried to raise the lever but my heart failed me. I thought of my approaching marriage with Adelaide, the fruition of my life-long dreams--yet I could not force myself to throw it I thought of you, dear Louis, and of the many plans we had often discussed for the future--still I could not raise it. I thought of my recent discoveries in bacteriological science--secret, because not yet fully developed--which must perish with me, but I could not throw that lever. I could not Great God! The weight of the world seemed to hold it down. All at once I heard a subdued murmur--a faint vibrant tremor, which seemed to invade my very blood, until every fibre of me had a heart to quake with unspeakable fear. And yet it seemed to me I had always known that sound. In the most commonplace noises I could recall it--in the rush of the wind among the trees, in the sound of running water, in the low murmur of the human voice--it was my fate! My fingers groped in the leather case, closing about a vial....
