Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: . . . to him It is true that a small duty on imported wheat would add considerably to the revenue, and there was no good reason for Mr. Lowe remitting the old duty of a shilling a quarter, which brought in about a million a year, was easily collected, and did not affect the price of bread. It was a mere freak, like the match tax. But there is a double motive for the proposal which Mr. Ecroyd and others make to tax grain imported from the United States--first, to raise revenue, and secondly, to compel the Americans to lower their tariffs. It is, of course, impossible to say what effect reprisals would have upon the American Congress. Many industries are growing up which the Americans would be unwilling to see. The Policy of Self-Help, p. 3. arrested, . arrested, such as the trade in canned fruits and provisions, now becoming very extensive. Duties on these would produce a large amount of money, without inflicting the slightest hardship upon any class. But is it to be supposed that a duty upon grain would induce the American people to give up buying their own cotton and iron manufactures, and go back voluntarily to the position they were in when their domestic industries were entirely undeveloped We may dismiss the assumption that they would again retaliate by levying an export duty on raw cotton, for this is beyond their power. There is a clause in their Constitution, distinctly ordaining...
