Not illustrated. 1879 Excerpt: .thronged the streets to witness the passage of the funeral cortege. Many buildings were draped, and from balconies and windows and doors, the eager throng scattered flowers and sprinkled perfumed water over the passing procession. At the grave an oration was made by the VOL. LXXV. 25 principal of the Greek schools, beautiful, captivating even, for its rythmical flow, in connection with which the deceased ecclesiastic was decorated with a wreath of flowers. THE GRATITUDE OF THE GREEKS. After the ceremonies were concluded, the committee took occasion, on behalf of the Greek community, to express to the Armenian bishop and myself their hearty appreciation of our services and their warm thanks therefor. Not altogether content with this, the assistant bishop and the committee made a formal call at my house the next day, and repeated their expressions of thanks, and begged me particularly to communicate them to my superiors in America, which you will understand this letter as doing. A copy of my address was also desired, which I have furnished as well as I could prepare it from memory, as I spoke entirely without notes. This incident seems a very important one. It shows that a far greater degree of liberality exists among the Greeks than formerly, when such a thing as this would not have been possible. It is valuable, too, in preparing the way for work among them. All we desire at any time is access to the people. On this special occasion,...
