Excerpt: . . . Of HORSES (a). THE deserts of Tartary, with some islands to the east of India, and, now, of America also, breed wild Horses. I have been assured, and analogy makes it probable, that they live together in small herds, each of which has one of the most generous for a leader. So Elephants, Monkeys, Bulls, Asses, Camels, Elks, Antelopes, Deer, in a word, all animals that feed on herbs and fruits, appear to have a powerful impulse, which directs them to live in society. They every where find food in abundance, and have therefore fewer objects of contention; and each family, while it increases, daily learns, that a union of their powers is the best protection against their numerous carnivorous devourers. The same instinctive foresight, guided by cruel experience, bids them remain se (a) The Horse is called Asp, in Persian; Hejsan, in Arabic; Gore, in Indostan; and Koudra, in Tamoul. R 2 parate parate in those regions where few places are truly deserted, and where their most cruel enemy is man. The difference between Horses, not only of foreign, but of those bred upon the same spot, is perceptible at first sight. Many travellers have spoken concerning them; and I have consulted such as are most known, that I might avoid repeating the same things. My object has been, to form an assemblage of such facts, as may be proper to point out some of those moral and physical properties, general and...
