Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Outlines of Logic: An English Translation of Trendelenburg's Elementa 4. A declaratory sentence is (1) affirmative, (2) negative. Affirmation is declaration of a relation between this and that; Negation is a declaration of non-relation. The statements are true according as they agree with the facts of the case. 5. The phrase Not-man is not a name; nor is there any existing name by which we can call it, for it is neither a sentence nor a negation. Let it pass as an Indefinite name, for it can be ranked equally well under either Being or Not-being. Every affirmation or negation will be made up of a name and a verb, or of an indefinite name and a verb: for without a verb there can be neither affirmation nor negation. 6. Of terms, some are General, others Singular. By the former I mean such as can be predicated of many subjects; by the latter, such as cannot; e.g., we place man among general terms, Kallias among singular. A Proposition is a sentence affirming or denying...
