The destruction of the Virginia necessary and proper. Admiral Buchanan s view of the act. Flag-officer Tattnall ordered to return to Savannah and take command of the naval defenses of Georgia. He demands a Court of Inquiry, which convenes and finds adversely to Captain Tattnall. Protest entered, by some of the officers of the Virginia, against the official approval of the finding. Published strictures upon the conduct and finding of the court. Flag-officer Tattnall demands a Court Martial. It is ordered. Its composition. Charges, and Specifications of Charges preferred. Tattnall s defense. Finding of the court. General satisfaction at the triumphant vindication of Flag-officer Tattnall. Letter of the Honorable J. L. Petigru. There can be no question of the fact that upon the evacuation of Norfolk the usefulness of the Virginia terminated. The enemy would not meet her in the waters of Hampton Roads. All avenues for supplies, --such as coal, provisions, and water, --and all opportunities for repairs, were cut off. Her draft of water, (twenty-two feet six inches), was too great to allow her to steam up the James river. To have lightened her sufficiently to have permitted her, even under the most favorable circumstances, to have done so, would have destroyed her formidable character as an iron-clad; for her wooden sides would then have been exposed. Commodore Tattnall fully appreciated the situation and promptly assumed the responsibility of destroying her to prevent her falling into the hands of...
